As the Levent College family, we provided support to several important social projects, including donations to the Kemal Saraçoğlu Foundation, the purchase of hearing aids through the Hearing Impaired Association, assistance to the Çağlayan Children's Shelter, and contributions to women's shelters. Additionally, we fulfilled our responsibility to nature by planting trees in the Levent Schools Memory Forest, one for each student, symbolizing our commitment to environmental stewardship

Significant steps were also taken within the Green Schools Project to enhance environmental awareness and protect natural habitats. Our school made donations to support tree planting initiatives, aiming to cultivate environmental consciousness and preserve biodiversity.

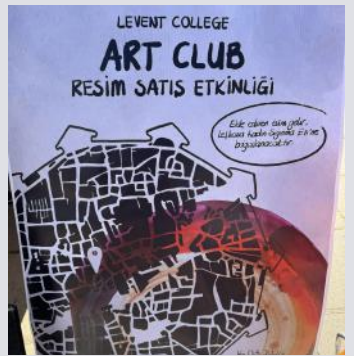

These efforts highlight Levent College's emphasis on developing not only academically successful students but also compassionate individuals. At Levent College, we prioritize social responsibility, ensuring that our students emerge as caring individuals ready to make meaningful contributions to society.

Pi (π) is a constant number of great significance in mathematics. Here are some interesting facts about pi and examples of pi in nature:

Examples of Pi in Nature:

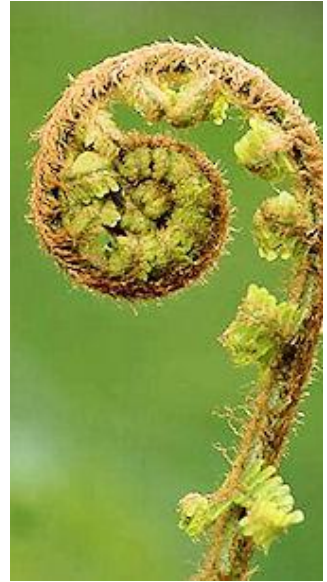

Circumference and Area of Circles: The circumference of a circle is obtained by multiplying its diameter by pi, while its area is calculated by multiplying the square of the radius by pi.

Wave Patterns: Wave movements in nature often exhibit the properties of pi in many instances such as the ratio between the length of a wave and its height in the ocean can be related to pi

Astronomy and Space: In astronomy, pi is used in mathematical modeling of the orbits of planets and the movements of celestial bodies.

Plant Structures: The leaves, flowers, or branches of plants form regular geometric shapes. For example, many plant leaves form spirals associated with mathematical concepts such as the Fibonacci sequence or the golden ratio.
